

Home Economics Education 家政教育

Instructor: Shih. Shing- Shing (phone #)

2 Credits/ 2 hours per week for Undergraduate Year One students

Course Description:

Home Economics has a direct relevance to the present and future life of every young person.

Its purpose is to equip young people in certain important skills for living as individuals and of establishing and developing a stable environment for their families. It encompasses studies of many of the processes which are necessary for day to day living, particularly within the household.

The main areas focus on the basic human needs for food, clothing, shelter and personal relationships. The disciplined study of the interrelationships of these areas is one of the major contributions of the subject to the curriculum.

Home Economics builds on the pupils' knowledge of different forms of home life and on their immediate experience of making choices in relation to the organization of their own lives.

Emphasis throughout the course is on management, creativity and living skills. This is to ensure that the young person taking the course will be equipped for personal independence and be able to take shared responsibility in the household and community in which he or she lives.

Course Objectives:

- 1 Students will demonstrate the knowledge and practical skills for application in the process of everyday life within the home and community.
- 2 Students will be capable of wise decision-making in areas related to the management of their personal resources.
- 3 Students will have competence in making wise consumer decisions.
- 4 Students will develop interest in the vocational aspects of the subject.
