幼兒發展專題研究 Seminar in Children's Development

This course offers an in-depth investigation of selected topics in early cognitive and language development of children. The goal is to enhance doctoral students' understanding of the complexities of child development. Students are required to study and examine relevant theories and empirical studies, and demonstrate their in-depth understanding by critically analyzing the strengths and weaknesses of various developmental research methodologies and through the preparation of a review paper on a topic selected by the students.