5 Pediatric ENT Emergencies

Robin A. Dyleski and Moustafa Mourad

3.1 Airway Foreign Body

Assess respiratory status, patency of airway, and ability to move air, as indicated by crying or speaking. If the patient is not exchanging air well, emergent airway control is required. Nonsurgical management includes the Heimlich maneuver or bedside direct laryngoscopy and endotracheal intubation followed by transfer to the operating room for definitive management. Removal of the foreign body is the goal of treatment. In children, especially with a coin, cricoidotomy may be necessary. Evaluation of the patient (History and Physical Examination)

► Evaluation

- History
  - Was the aspiration witnessed?
  - Type of foreign body, if known
  - Duration of symptoms
  - Dyspnea, labored breathing
  - Dysphagia
  - Drooling
  - Cough
  - Pain
  - Ability to cry/speak
  - History of tracheoesophageal fistula
  - Previous treatment for airway obstruction (e.g., bronchitis)
- Physical examination
  - Mental status
  - Presence of stridor
    - Inspiratory: glottic, subglottic, or supraglottic obstruction
    - Expiratory: subglottic or bronchial obstruction

- 順時針旋轉(C)
- 逆時針旋轉(O)
- 檢查元素(N)

- Computed tomography (CT): infrequently used but may be helpful in the event that clinical suspicion remains high but plain radiography is nondiagnostic.
- Definitive treatment
  - Rigid bronchoscopy in operating room with foreign body retrieval
  - Flexible bronchoscopy is not advised when there is strong evidence for a foreign body. The flexible bronchoscope working channel is too small to permit use of appropriate forceps to grasp the object in young children. Flexible bronchoscopy is a useful diagnostic tool for the patient who arrives already intubated with a questionable history of foreign body aspiration. If a foreign body is seen, then rigid bronchoscopy for foreign body removal under general anesthesia is recommended. Only very small foreign bodies may be able to be removed with flexible bronchoscopy.

3.2 Esophageal Foreign Body

► Evaluation

- History
  - Describe object (blunt, sharp, disk battery)
  - Duration of ingestion (<24 hours vs >24 hours)
- Symptoms
  - Dysphagia
  - Odynophagia
  - Drooling
  - Vomiting
  - Chest pain
- History of gastrointestinal abnormalities such as prior tracheoesophageal fistula or esophageal stenosis
- Intake/nutritional status (assess need for intravenous [IV] hydration)
