People are more ____11____ the disappearance of insect pollinators than before. However, this is never something new—since the 1930s, ____12____ urban development, and agricultural and grazing land, the once important nature helpers have ____13____. It is a paradox that for food production we depend on the ecological services of the very creatures ____14____ habitats we compromise: we need pollinators, like bees and butterflies, to transfer pollen between crop plant, leading to fertilization and seed production. But how do we help restore pollinator populations to bring back the ecological balance we are looking for, while keeping our urban development?

A group of people at University of Bristol, UK, and other ____15____ schools are working on the Urban Pollinators Project, which aims to research the ____16____ of threats to insect pollinators, and inform future mitigation strategies. The scientists in University of Bristol are working on how to build up a picture of pollinator's biodiversity across ____17____ urban habitats. Their research is found interesting and unexpected: pollinators, like bees, are driven by the availability of food and suitable nesting sites; ____18____ a huge variety of plant species in urban areas, the bee diversity is higher in urban areas than farmland. These scientists are still undertaking large-scale projects to see what we humans can do for pollinators and Mother Nature. They suggest that if we human beings want to survive and thrive, these little 19 helpers may play 20 role than we presumed.

Holi Festival

One of the major festivals of India, Holi is celebrated with enthusiasm and gaiety on the full moon day in the month of Phalgun which is the month of March as per the Gregorian calendar. Holi festival may be celebrated with various names and people of different states might be following different traditions. But, what makes Holi so unique and special is the spirit of it which remains the same throughout the country and even across the globe, wherever it is celebrated.

Preparations

Entire country wears a festive look when it is time for Holi celebration. Market places get abuzz with activity as frenzied shoppers start making preparations for the festival. Heaps of various hues of gulal and abeer can be seen on the roadside days before the festival.

Pichkarisin innovative and modern design too come up every year to lure the children who wish to collect them as Holi memorabilia and of course, to drench everybody in the town.

Season of Bloom

Everybody gets delighted at the arrival of Holi as the season itself is so gay. Holi is also called the Spring Festival - as it marks the arrival of spring the season of hope and joy. The gloom of the winter goes as Holi promises of bright summer days. Nature too, it seems rejoices at the arrival of Holi and wears its best clothes. Fields get filled with crops promising a good harvest to the farmers and flowers bloom coloring the surroundings and filling fragrance in the air.

Play of Colors

Great excitement can be seen in people on the next day when it is actually the time for the play of colors. Shops and offices remain closed for the day and people get all the time to get crazy and whacky. Bright colors of gulal, or holi color powder, and abeer (or fragrances) fill the air and people take turns in pouring color water over each other. Children take special delight in spraying colors on one another with their pichkaris and throwing water balloons and passersby. Women and senior citizen form groups called tolis and move in colonies - applying colors and exchanging greetings. Songs, dance on the rhythm of dholak and mouthwatering Holi delicacies are the other highlights of the day.

Sober Evening

After a fun filled and exciting day, the evenings were spent in sobriety when people meet friends and relatives and exchange sweets and festive greetings.

It is said the spirit of Holi encourages the feeling of brotherhood in society and even the enemies turn friend on this day. People of all communities and even religions participate in this joyous and colorful festival and strengthen the secular fabric of the nation.

In January, six Taiwanese firefighters, all under 30 years of age, died in a bowling alley blaze in the Sinwu District of Taoyuan. While the firefighters were trying to extinguish flames on the second floors, the building collapsed, leaving the firefighters trapped in the rubble. By the time rescue workers discovered the men, it was too late to save them. Taoyuan District Prosecutors' Office announced it would be launching an investigation into the matter to determine if this tragedy could have been prevented.

Soon after, it was learned that the bowling alley, where the fire occurred, had been operating illegally for the past two decades. Its owner failed to obtain a permit for the second and third floors, so they never underwent safety inspections. This information infuriated the mayor of Taoyuan, who demanded that all illegal buildings in Taoyuan be inspected within the next ten days. The mayor also went on to state that he was seeking the maximum life insurance compensation from the government for the victims' loved ones. This would amount to roughly NT$19 million per family.

Additional questions linger about the incident, such as if there are too few firefighters in Taiwan and if they are being supplied with the proper equipment. For example, the firefighters could have benefited from using thermographic cameras, which would have indicated that the building was too hot and in danger of collapse. Unfortunately, Taiyuan's fir department currently possesses only two such cameras, and the firefighters that day weren't assigned either of them. In the aftermath, Taiwan's National Association for Firefighters' Rights has launched protests, demanding that government officials do more to ensure firefighters have the tools they need to do their jobs and to ensure that commercial buildings in Taoyuan possess proper permits. The association feels that by refusing to provide enough financial support and proper equipment for firefighters, the government is putting the lives of these brave workers at risk.
